

What Next for European Crisis Engagement?

As the EU launches far-reaching new instruments such as NDICI and the European Peace Facility, the German government has reviewed its toolbox for crisis prevention, stabilization and peacebuilding. What lessons did Germany draw? Are they the right lessons? How do they compare with the experience of others? What should be priorities to make the EU a stronger actor in preventing violence and building peace?

As part of an event series on the lessons learned in the German government's implementation report on its Guidelines "Preventing Crises, Resolving Conflict, Building Peace", the Global Public Policy Institute (GPPi) invites you to an online panel discussion.
